Classification of Operations 1970

INTRODUCTION

The General Register Office (now re-named The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys), has been closely associated with the development of classifications of surgical operations during the past two decades. The advent of the Hospital In-Patient Enquiry in 1949 and a growing interest in hospital statistics revealed the need for a classification of surgical operations so that information could be recorded uniformly and collected nationally.

A provisional classification was provided in 1944 by the Medical Research Council and this, in association with the manual used by the Armed Forces of the United States of America, was used for the first draft which appeared in 1950 and which is still in use in some teaching hospitals. The classification which developed from this was published in 1956, although the introduction to that volume admitted that revision of the index was still incomplete, and asked for further suggestions for its improvement.

Although the General Register Office was active in developing the classification, it made little use itself of the code in its own work, and it was not until the results of a complete year's recording of operations in the Hospital In-Patient Enquiry during 1961 became available that its practical value and defects could be studied. The index was found inadequate for routine use; difficulty was experienced in placing many of the newer operative techniques; and more than ten per cent of the categories contained no case, or only one case. It was thus evident that revision was badly needed in order to make the code a fully efficient tool for the analysis of hospital data. The first attempt at revision was started in 1962 but the old code was used for national records during 1966.

A classification largely in its present form has been in use by the Hospital In-Patient Enquiry and most regions undertaking Hospital Activity Analysis since 1967. A definitive version was prepared and distributed at the end of 1969 by the General Register Office to hospitals undertaking Hospital Activity Analysis, and the work of preparation of this version was done under the guidance of a small sub-committee whose members were

Miss C Dennis FRCS Mr R S Lawrie MD MS FRCS Mr J H Morgan FMR Mr D Stobart (Secretary)
Dr A M Adelstein M D DPH
Dr W A Wilson MD DPH

Valuable assistance was received from the Royal College of Surgeons and associated professional bodies, and the help and suggestions of many people, particularly surgeons and record officers, also played an important part.

The present 1971 edition is, in the main, a reprint of the 1969 booklet issued to hospitals. A few minor discrepancies in the tabular lists have been corrected, while the index as well as the lists of eponyms and other terms have been enlarged by the inclusion of more entries. A new feature is the reproduction of the Short List of operations or groups of operations which are performed sufficiently frequently to warrant detailed analysis.

Scope and Content of the Classification

The decision whether a procedure is a surgical operation or not depends on several factors which include:

- (1) performance in a properly equipped operating theatre,
- (2) by a trained surgeon,
- (3) with the use of anaesthesia and aseptic measures,
- (4) using techniques (destructive, cutting, puncture or forced manipulation) not normally employed on patients,
- (5) liable to cause loss of anatomical continuity or functional ability in the patient,
- (6) carrying some risk of misadventure or even death.

One or more of these factors may be absent; the last is perhaps the most relevant consideration in cases of doubt. In practice any term mentioned on hospital records (unless it was obvious that some misunderstanding or clerical error had occurred) has been accepted by the Hospital In-Patient Enquiry and so some minor procedures appear which do not in themselves justify the description "surgical operation". In order to enable comparable statistics of surgical operations to be prepared, these minor and dubious procedures have been relagated to a position at the end of the list, occupying the last 40 categories of the classification. The total for "real" surgical operations can be obtained from those assigned to categories 001-959.

Steps have been taken to preserve compatibility when operations coded in one year are compared with, or merged with another year, by making use of fourth digit subdivisions and leaving category numbers unused for other meanings. Comparability is aided by footnotes on the pages affected, which note the changes which have taken place, and a summary of these changes in included at page viii. In previous interim versions the fourth digit subdivisions were shown by letters of the alphabet thus, (a) (b) but in this definitive revision they appear as numbers to complete a four-digit numerical code. The code in its three digit form should be sufficient to serve most purposes of central administrative bodies and general hospitals, but it may not be sufficiently detailed to cater for the needs of specialist units or those undertaking research projects. It is hoped that numerical data accumulated locally will enable a more detailed classification of operations in specialized fields to be formulated, based upon the framework provided in this code.

Most authorities who have been consulted agree that the use of eponyms as a means of describing operations should not be encouraged. Accordingly eponymous terms have been excluded from the tabular lists, but retained in the index to assist coders who may meet with these terms on records. Other eponyms, such as those for organs of the body (the tubes named after Eustachio or Fallopius) which are more firmly established in medical usage, are listed in medical dictionaries and accordingly are shown in the tabular lists.
